The 2007 Annual ANU Reconciliation Lecture celebrates the fortieth Anniversary of the 1967 Referendum, which saw more than 90 per cent of eligible Australians vote 'yes' to acknowledge Indigenous Australians as full members of the Australian community and give the Commonwealth Government the power to make laws regarding Indigenous people.

The premise of this Reconciliation Lecture is that respect for human rights, equality and justice must be at the heart of reconciliation. When the British settled Australia, they used their laws to dispossess and oppress the Indigenous people of this country. Two centuries later, growing acceptance of human rights principles has enabled Australia to turn its back on earlier oppression and to use its laws to promote equality and justice for Indigenous people. However, this process is far from complete and it must be a goal of reconciliation to achieve fully the equal enjoyment of all human rights – civil and political, as well as economic, social and cultural – by all Australians.

This is the fourth ANU Reconciliation Lecture. The inaugural lecture was delivered by Patrick Dodson in 2004, the second by Jack Thompson in 2005, and the third by John Hartigan in 2006.
